

Good on paper?

14 November 2003

Mark Griffiths

Nick Saunders (Professional, THES, November 7) claims that some academics submit identical papers to multiple journals simultaneously to increase their chances of getting published.

All the journals to which I have ever submitted have guidelines requiring authors to confirm that the paper is not under review elsewhere before entering the peer-review process.

I find it hard to believe that simultaneous journal submission is a common tactic for getting published.

Mark Griffiths
Psychology division
Nottingham Trent University